

A college education is one of the most rewarding gifts anyone can give.

Imagine a world where your gender, socio-economic background, ethnicity, race or disability does not determine if you can afford college. The LaceLocker® Scholarship Fund (LLSF) uses an ingenious funding model to enable first generation young women to attend college who could otherwise not afford to enroll. At the same time, athletes are kept safe from injuries due to loose shoelaces while exercising or competing using the LaceLocker® product.

How does this fascinating new financing model create endowed scholarships?

Sponsorships will primarily fund each individual four-year full-ride scholarship:

Help us give underprivileged, first generation female college students and special needs athletes the freedom to pursue their dreams and reach new heights.

Individual donors, corporate sponsors and professional athletes can endow a four-year, full-ride scholarship in their name or the name of anyone of their choice – at the institution of their choice.

The scholarship is specifically designed for female first generation college students whose financial need is so great that they could not attend university otherwise.

Each sponsorship makes the world a safer place for special needs athletes. How?

Many disabled athletes cannot tie their shoes, so loose shoelaces pose a real danger. Together with the LLSF, sponsors donate LaceLockers® as a motivational message to thousands of special needs athletes.

Shoelaces stay tied, and the danger of injuries is drastically reduced. These LaceLockers® are custom-branded with the sponsor's logo or design, promoting safety and helping disabled athletes reach their dreams, whether they are just beginning or are veteran competitors.

All sponsorships are tax-deductible.

You can shape the future of underprivileged young women as first generation college students, permanently changing the trajectory of their lives. Sponsorships are a great way to share how your company is making the world a better place.
